

Government: Changing Times, Changing Roles

Turn to First/Last for Help? Canadians most likely to rely on themselves

Turn to First on Issues Canadians most likely to rely on themselves

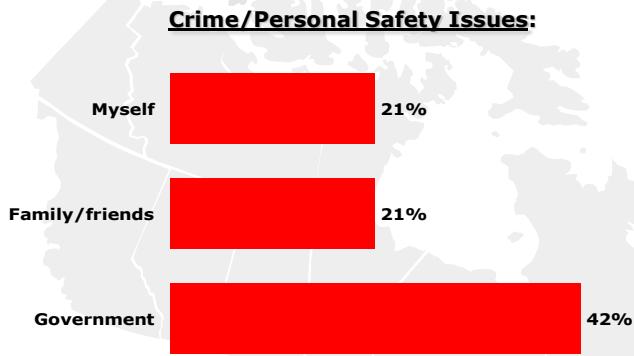

Turn to First on Issues Canadians most likely to rely on themselves

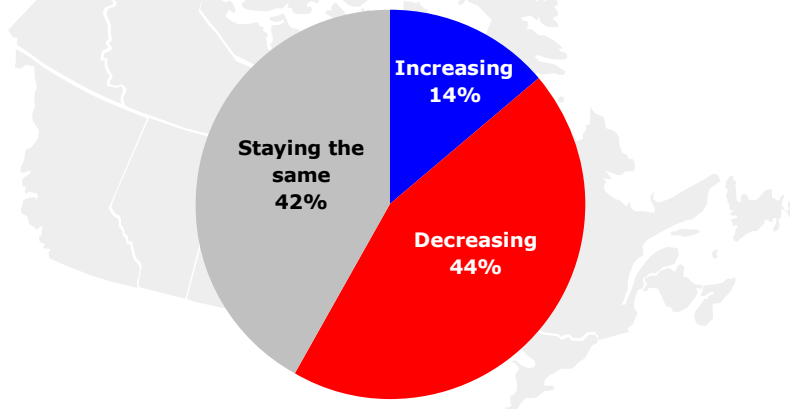

Turn to First on Issues

Canadians turn to gov't on crime/personal safety

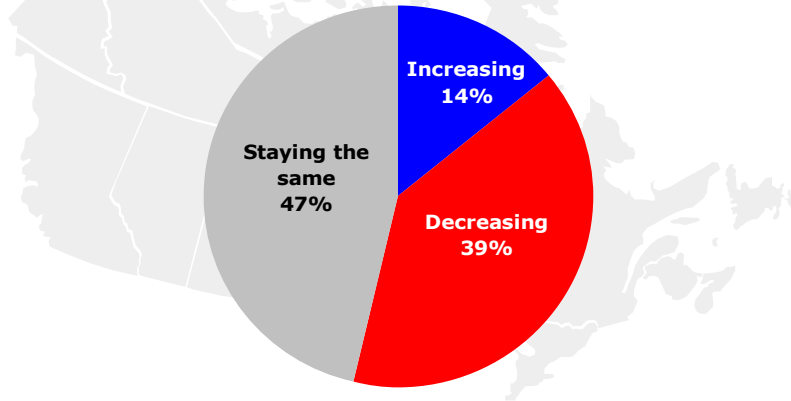

Tackling Social Challenges

Is your confidence in the ability of government to tackle big social challenges like welfare reform, improving health care and education...

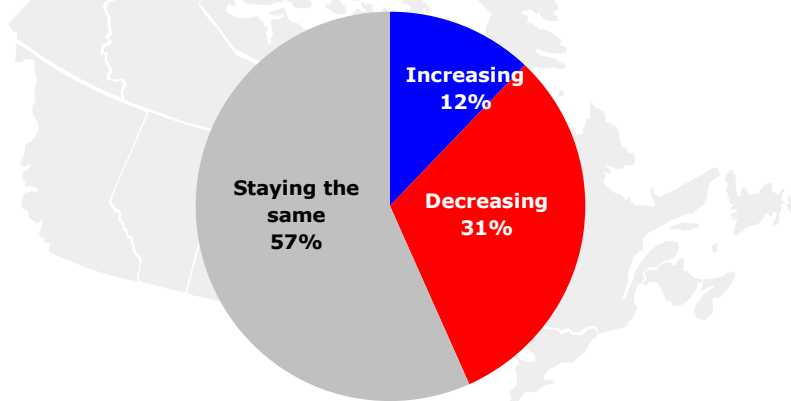

Tackling Environmental Challenges

Is your confidence in the ability of government to tackle big environmental challenges like climate change, pollution...

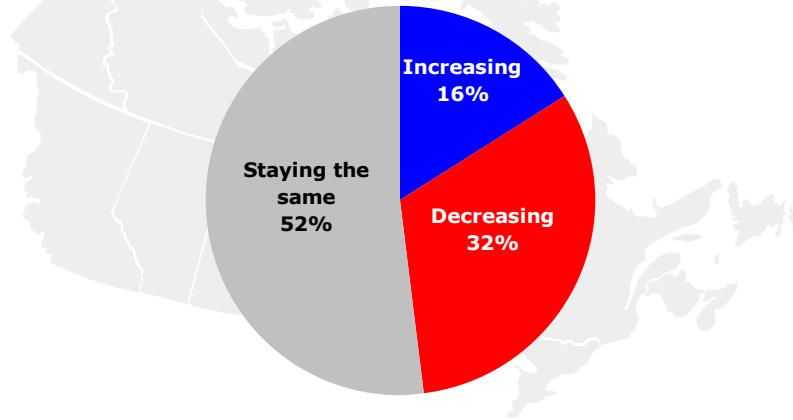

Tackling Moral Challenges

Is your confidence in the ability of government to tackle big moral challenges like abortion, euthanasia, stem-cell research...

Tackling Economic Challenges

Is your confidence in the ability of government to tackle big economic challenges like sustaining economic recovery or improving productivity....increasing, decreasing or staying the same?

Key Points

- This is not to say that governments are seen to have no major place in Society. That role today however is to serve as a facilitator of individual and community initiatives and a partner with other stakeholders to respond to citizen and community demands.
- Governments are expected to respond – cautiously and with the benefit of past learning – to problems as they arise, not to pursue “grand visions” or force “grand designs” on the population.

Universal Care plus Freedom of Choice

